TO: FRED MEURER, CITY MANAGER
FROM: CHIP RERIG, SENIOR PLANNER
CC: BILL WOJTKOWSKI, COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT DIRECTOR
DATE: JULY 29, 2005
SUBJECT: NAVAL POSTGRADUATE SCHOOL EXPIRING WATER CREDITS

Per our discussion, based on data provided by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District, the Naval Postgraduate School has two (2) commercial water credits from demolished buildings. These credits include: 1) 2.682 acre-feet of water from the demolition of a 45,079 square foot office/warehouse that expires on January 1, 2006, and 2) 1.559 acre-feet of water from the demolition of a 26,215 square foot office/warehouse that expires on November 10, 2007. Both of these credits are eligible for a five (5) year extension.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. Please contact me if I can answer any questions or provide additional information.

I CERTIFY THAT this information is true and correct.

Donald H. Rumsfeld
Secretary of Defense
1000 Defense Program
Washington, DC 20301-1000

Dear Secretary Rumsfeld:

This letter is intended as a strong endorsement of the importance of the Naval Postgraduate School in providing educational resources and research essential to national security. While I understand the need to evaluate all elements of the United States armed forces with an aim to better align resources with the nation's defense and homeland security needs, I am convinced that NPS is a particularly valuable asset in this portfolio.

For the past decade, I have had the opportunity to work with the NPS administration and faculty to assess the quality of their programs and develop new mechanisms capable of meeting the changing needs of the armed forces in the face of rapid technological change. Just as the high-performance workplace characterizing today's industry demands ongoing education for managers and executives, it is essential that our military officers have a sophisticated understanding of the technology that increasingly dominates their activities. The NPS provides high quality instructional programs comparable to the nation's best graduate schools. It has tailored its efforts to meet the particular needs of the U.S. armed forces, carefully aligning its instructional and research programs with current national defense and homeland security priorities. My review of comparative financial data suggests that the actual academic costs of NPS programs are quite reasonable, more comparable to the best of the public university graduate engineering programs (e.g., U. Michigan, Purdue, U. California) than the more expensive private universities (e.g., MIT, Stanford, Caltech).

The NPS programs play a unique role in building "communities of practice" within the officer corps at an important stage of military careers. It pulls together a very unique community of officers, international students, and faculty engaged in the environment of a research university focused on national security. Leaders of both higher education and industry are increasingly convinced that such mid-career educational opportunities provide the most effective approach to professional education. Furthermore, through the combination of graduate education and research, NPS helps the U.S. armed forces track the rapid evolution of advanced educational needs, programs, and technology, providing an "over the horizon" perspective on the evolution of the global, knowledge-driven society that now characterizes our times.

Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld

NPS has been quite agile in transforming itself to focus on today's challenges, including, in particular, the global war on terror. Its Center for Civil-Military Relations has strengthened civilian-military relations and is helping other nation's cope with a changing threat environment. Its Leadership Development and Education for Sustained Peace program has prepared units deploying to stability operations in regions such as Iraq, Afghanistan, and Kosovo. It has recently developed a unique master degree curriculum in homeland defense. NPS has also been at the forefront in developing and applying Internet-based technology for distributed learning to the U.S. armed forces throughout the world, establishing the continual learning environment so essential to track technological change.

There is one additional—and I believe compelling—reason for my strong support of NPS as an important element of the nation's defense infrastructure. As advanced education becomes a more pervasive need of the high-performance workplace, and as college graduates seek careers requiring lifelong learning, employers are under ever-greater pressure to provide graduate educational opportunities. The fact that there are currently over 1,600 "corporate universities" is evidence that most large companies find that building inhouse capability is not only essential for recruiting employees but frequently more cost-effective than relying primarily upon outsourcing education programs from traditional colleges and universities. Hence I believe that the educational opportunities offered by NPS are increasingly essential to recruiting the talent required for this nation's defense and security.

In conclusion, it is my belief that the Naval Postgraduate School should be viewed as a very critical resource for both the Navy and the broader United States armed forces, not only in achieving the skill levels that will be required of an increasingly technology-intensive national and homeland defense effort, but also a vital factor in recruiting and retaining the very best talent from our colleges and universities. If the United States did not already have such an asset, it would likely be compelled to create just such an institution to effectively compete in a global, knowledge-intensive marketplace for the human capital necessary for national security.

It is my hope that such considerations will be kept in mind as Department of Defense makes the very difficult decisions on resource allocations in the months ahead.

Honorable Donald H. Rumsfeld
Secretary of Defense
1000 Defense Pentagon
Washington, DC 20301-1000

Dear Secretary Rumsfeld,

The Base Realignment and Closure process is an extraordinary challenge, and I do not wish to add to your many difficult decisions. However, I would like to draw your attention to an opportunity to create a lasting force for transformation within the Department of Defense and to further strengthen a national asset, the Naval Postgraduate School (NPS).

As President of the University of California from 1995 to 2003 and having twice served on the Board of Advisors of NPS, I have monitored developments at NPS. In its 100-year history, NPS has evolved from a single engineering department at the US Naval Academy into the Nation's premier defense oriented research university. Today, NPS provides the Department with an effective, diverse, and sustainable educational institution that supports current and future readiness, advances in technology, and the educational programs that facilitate getting our superior technology into the hands of the warfighter. NPS is a Joint/Coalition/Inter-Agency research university with nearly 500 faculty and researchers and an overall enrollment of more than 2,000 students. It reaches out to our coalition partners and friends abroad by educating hundreds of international officers in its in-residence programs and it offers an important instrument of strategic communication by reaching thousands of international civilians and officers with its mobile education teams. It is not a "rear-view mirror" organization, hell-bent on preserving legacy systems and traditional ways of doing business. It is a source of positive change within DoD by bringing junior officers from all services (only 45% of its students are from the Navy), scholars and DoD representatives together to work solutions to tomorrow's defense problems.

Recent accomplishment of the faculty and students at NPS are too numerous to list, but several achievements clearly support the transformational goals of this BRAC and the effort to win the Global War on Terror:

- NPS has been active in unmanned vehicles (air, surface and sub-surface) for many years;
- NPS is probably the best center of area studies in the United States (and it is co-located with the Defense Language Institute);

- NPS developed a significant program of education and research for SOCOM about a decade ago;
- NPS established an innovative in-residence/distance learning masters degree program, which is the only degree program funded by the Department of Homeland Security;
- NPS is the foremost center for study and research in Information Systems, Information Operations, and Information Assurance, which led you to designate it as DoD Center for Information Operations.

NPS has always been highly responsive to national security needs, creating or modifying programs in response to today's demands and tomorrow's problems and I believe that the institution can do even more for our country in the future.

As you examine and realign our military infrastructure, I would ask you to consider an expanded role for NPS: to provide focused educational programs for the total force, including both our enlisted and civilian members, and those civilians who support our efforts in the overall national security workforce. The sustainment and development of the civilian government workforce faces its own challenges. United States universities are filled with those seeking degrees in scientific, technical and engineering areas, both at the Master's and Doctoral level. Yet, too small a percentage of these students are United States citizens who will be eligible for jobs requiring security clearances. The Office of Naval Research has estimated that Navy labs alone will need to hire up to 500 people a year over the next ten years to replace its existing citizen workforce. I believe that NPS can provide leadership in attacking some of these problems, but to do so NPS will have to develop partnerships with other universities and R&D facilities. The University of California System along with the LLNL would provide an ideal partnership in this endeavor, perhaps through a Public-Private Partnership or other administrative structure.

NPS has evolved to become a national asset; it is the only research university in the world that is focused exclusively on national security issues. I believe that the demand for the products that NPS can provide has outgrown the institution's current relationship with the rest of the Defense Department. I believe that NPS might better serve the country if it becomes a DoD institution, recognizing that the School now serves all of the Services, OSD, NSA, CIA, etc. Alternatively, NPS might become a part of the UC System – perhaps having a status and relationship similar to that of LLNL so that it can serve as a mechanism to attract U.S. civilians into technical defense related work.

I would be happy to discuss these issues with you at your convenience.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Donald Rumsfeld
Secretary of Defense
1000 The Pentagon
Washington, D.C 20301-1000

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I am writing on behalf of the American Council on Education (ACE). Recognized as the major coordinating body for all of the nation's higher education institutions, ACE provides leadership and a unifying voice on key higher education issues to a membership of 1,800 accredited, degree-granting institutions and higher education-related associations, organizations, and corporations.

It has come to my attention that some individuals believe that the programs offered by the Naval Postgraduate School can be quickly and inexpensively replicated at other institutions of higher learning. I do not believe this to be the case.

The Naval Postgraduate School is a unique institution. Because its structure encourages its faculty to seek reimbursable research projects from across the Department of Defense (DoD), and because its young officer-students are energetic and fully cognizant of the challenges faced by today's global combatants, it is a leading center of defense innovation. I firmly believe that if the NPS did not exist today, the nation would be working aggressively to create just such a center. NPS can and should serve as a model for all DoD educational institutions.

NPS efficiently affords more than 1,600 military officer graduate students, as well as additional distance learners, the opportunity to work with some 500 faculty who have expertise in education and research. They combine their efforts to learn how new technologies and strategies can counteract future threats to America and how to best advance the global war against terrorism.

NPS offers more than and operates differently from many traditional civilian universities. Its year-round scheduling maximizes course contact hours, allowing students to gain an education in less time than would be required at a civilian university. This accelerated pace translates into enormous savings for DoD because the costliest part of educating officers is financing students' salaries and benefits. By minimizing the time spent on campus, NPS maximizes the benefits that both the students and the country receive from their education.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Secretary,

I also want to thank you for visiting the Institute for Advanced Technology. I have heard many favorable comments on your talk to the Army fellowship students. Especially interesting was the emphasis on the "Principles of Leadership."

And please add my personal thanks for my recent appointment to the Board of Advisors of the Naval Postgraduate School (NPS). I attended my first Board meeting two weeks ago and I am quite impressed with the students, faculty and laboratories. Dean Frederick E. Terman (Stanford), one of the greats in engineering education, once told me, those are the three essential components of excellence in educational. Add to that, the compelling military focus, and you have my general impressions of NPS.

Three specific impressions are important,

First, there seems to be a tendency in present day analyses to compare costs at NPS with costs at civilian graduate schools on the basis of normalized metrics, such as cost per credit hour. In my opinion, such comparisons are too simplistic and may lead to erroneous conclusions. Clearly NPS has fixed costs (faculty and staff salaries, facilities costs, etc.) which are paid by the Department of the Navy. While civilian institutions have similar costs, only a fractional part of those costs are paid by the Navy (in tuition) and the remainder are paid by state appropriations or by private endowments. However, assuming a fixed educational content, curriculum completion in a civilian institution will take longer to complete. This added time is due to the efficiency of the year around program at NPS when compared to the academic scheduling in civilian institutions. And since the officer salaries dominate the total costs to the Department of the Navy, the longer time spent to complete the fixed requirements is more expensive in civilian institutions.

A second issue overlooked by the usual analyses, is the actual content of the curriculum. At NPS, the Curricula Sponsor is the driver of the educational content. In my opinion, the content of all curricula at NPS is carefully crafted and highly focused on military issues and technology. Needless to say, this would not be the case in civilian institutions. I have taken the time to read some recent of the thesis work, especially by the Unrestricted Line Officers working in a team effort. It was very good and could only have been that good if done at NPS.

My final impression relates to institutional uniqueness. Recall that I was at one time Director of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA). After a few years in that position it was clear to me that DARPA was unique. Should it ever happen that its mission was substantially changed or closed out, then the institution probably could never be reconstituted. The landscape of the Executive Branch has several examples of failed attempts to emulate DARPA. The process of such radical change is not reversible. I have much the same view of the uniqueness of NPS. I am convinced that should naval officer graduate education be transferred away from NPS, the relevance of that education will be substantially weakened and that NPS itself could never be reconstituted.

Again, thank you for visiting IAT. Best wishes for success in your new position in the Department of Defense.

Sincerely,
Robert Fossum

The Honorable Anthony J. Principi, Chairman
2005 Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission
2521 South Clark Street, Suite 600
Arlington, VA 22202

Dear Chairman and Commission:

We chair the Board of Advisors of the Naval Postgraduate School (NPS) and the Board of Visitors of Air University (including the Air Force Institute of Technology, AFIT), respectively. For some time now, we have participated in the debate on how to best provide for doctoral and master's level technical education of members of the Armed Forces. We would like to offer some insights and information on the outcome of the Base Closure and Realignment Commission (BRAC) meeting on July 1, 2005, as it affects NPS and AFIT. This is crucial to good decision making affecting these two fine educational institutions.

We believe that the best course of action is to allow both NPS and AFIT to pursue their current evolution — integrating similar programs, maintaining or strengthening the existing ones that provide unique value to service members' education, and starting new ones that serve immediate or long-term needs of the nation. Both institutions are in the process of coordinating these programs. They have formed partnerships that leverage each school's programs, faculties, and investments, and have made tangible gains integrating and consolidating certain courses. Our Boards have NPS and AFIT on paths toward more sharing and efficiencies, while preserving specific service competencies where essential.

We believe that physically closing, moving, or simply merging the programs of NPS and AFIT would result in loss of both relevance and quality. Civilian education, such as that offered for instance, at MIT or Stanford University, does not meet the needs of the Armed Forces in the way AFIT and NPS do. For example, civilian institutions do not address issues of defense acquisition or counterinsurgency as AFIT and NPS do, nor do they conduct some of the classified research that provides in-depth, specialized education to members of the Armed Forces. Displacing these programs and trying to reconstruct them elsewhere would take a long time and would result in losses at a time when the public can hardly afford it.

As Board chairs, we understand and, in the public interest, share the Commission's concerns about economic value, cost, and efficiency. We have seen these issues from the perspective of a governing board. Given the complex and different ways in which the Department of Defense, Navy, and Air Force keep cost data, simple arithmetic and superficial comparisons to civilian education costs can lead to poor decision outcomes. We urge you and your analysts to carefully reconsider conclusions concerning costs that may have led to your outcome on July 1, 2005. For example, we understand Navy cost data supports the conclusion that the NPS cost of education, per student, per academic year (9 months) is less than that for graduate programs in engineering at Stanford University. Similarly, we understand that cost data collected by the Air Force supports the conclusion that relying on civilian universities for its current and emerging technical degrees would be more costly — in terms of dollars, time, and flexibility — especially when designing new courses to match changing requirements.

Accordingly, we believe closing or relocating AFIT or NPS would probably not provide the financial benefits that seem to be expected at present. That would carry some high intangible costs, such as the loss of the military nature of their programs and the benefits of US military personnel studying side-by-side with foreign officers. It would also disrupt essential linkages to military research laboratories, related functions, and effective relationships with academic allies.

We firmly believe, and urge you to conclude as well, that AFIT and NPS should remain separate institutions and continue on the path of coordination of programs they already pursue. That is the best for the Navy, Air Force, and the nation, as well as our international allies who participate in our highly technical programs today.

We welcome any opportunity to meet with you, the other commissioners, and analysts to further explain our views.

July 25, 2005

Chairman Anthony Principi
2005 Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission
2521 S. Clark St., Suite 600
Arlington, VA 22202

Dear Chairman Principi and members of the Commission,

As the former Chancellor of the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, I was pleased to read about the possible consolidation of the Naval Post Graduate School and the Defense Language Institute in Monterey. This idea has surfaced before, but it was not implemented. While such a consolidation made sense both academically and financially, the concept has been rejected in the past because the two schools were operated by different branches of the Armed Services. However, in today's era of "jointness," this past lack of inter-service collaboration should no longer stand in the way doing what makes imminent sense.

Four points are clear:

1. Both NPS and DLI have independently established well-deserved reputations for excellence.
2. Because of their "exempt" pay systems, there would not be any savings in faculty salaries if the schools were relocated.
3. There is an opportunity to reduce total operating costs by eliminating current duplications in the schools' support services.
4. Several of the academic programs in both schools could be further enhanced by the collaboration which would be fostered if the NPS and DLI programs belonged to the same organization.

Point number 1: The Naval Postgraduate School with about 550 faculty fills a unique role in providing graduate programs in the sciences, engineering, management, and international studies that are tailored to specific DOD needs and are regularly reviewed by boards of DOD personnel who utilize the graduates of these programs. The operation of the Defense Language Institute with nearly 1200 academic faculty is also overseen by a board with representation from all of the DOD Services and Agencies with foreign language needs. Based on the guidance of this language policy board, DLI has developed instructional programs that teach and test the languages needed to meet national security needs (rather than the languages offered at traditional universities) – and it teaches those languages to higher levels of proficiency than is attained by college foreign language majors at other institutions.

Point number 2: As with any university, about 80% of the cost of operations is faculty salaries. However, the salary scales used at the NPS and DLI are based on national market data rather than on local cost-of-living calculations. This means the current salary scales would not change and no savings would be realized if the schools were relocated to another area with a lower cost-of-living index.

Point number 3: The viability of a consolidated DOD university is validated by the organizational structure of major universities. Just as every major university includes multiple colleges as diverse as humanities and engineering – all of which are supported by a single organizational infrastructure, the DLI and NPS programs could, despite their separate missions, share major academic support functions. Such a consolidation would reduce redundancy and create savings in major support areas such as admissions, budgeting, faculty recruiting, academic pay setting, class scheduling, instructional technology, information management, institutional research, and facilities maintenance.

Point number 4: The consolidation of NPS and DLI programs could further strengthen programs in both schools. For instance, the NPS international programs would benefit from the participation of DLI faculty who were raised in the countries and regions covered in those courses. Foreign students attending NPS courses could serve as “native informants” in DLI language classes. The instructional technology divisions at both schools could share programs and authoring systems.

In sum, whether the combined school would be headed by a civilian president or a military officer assigned on a rotational basis from each of the participating Services, the creation of a single consolidated DOD university would have both financial and academic advantages.

If there is interest in pursuing this concept, I would be glad to discuss the details of how such a consolidation might be accomplished.

Sincerely,

JAMES D. WATKINSJuly 28, 2005

The Honorable Anthony J. Principi
Chairman
Base Realignment and Closure Commission
2521 South Clark Street
Suite 600
Arlington, VA 22202

Dear Tony:

I noted with great interest the Base Realignment and Closure Commission's decision to explore possible realignment of the Naval Postgraduate (NPS) School in Monterey, California. NPS is a forward-looking transformational organization that offers unique educational programs to Navy, Army, Air Force and Coast Guard officers and international students from allied and friendly countries. Nowhere else in the world do so many U.S. and international officer and hundreds of expert faculty work together to study issues of immediate and future national security interest. These young men and women as well as their families study and live together under ideal conditions for advanced study, allowing them to forge professional bonds crucial for the coalition strategy of this nation at a fateful and critical moment in the evolution of war. NPS transfers learning, science, and technology to officers so that they can apply this knowledge in their jobs, helping to improve our ability to overcome threats to our security.

For years, people have suggested that it might be possible to privatize NPS by sending officers to traditional universities. This option has been explored repeatedly, and each time it has proven to be a red herring. If NPS did not exist, we would have to reinvent it because it makes a contribution to national security that cannot be met by civilian institutions.

The only mission of the Naval Postgraduate School is to conduct research and education in support of U.S. national security interests. No other research university in the country embraces this mission, which allows NPS to cultivate unique programs and opportunities. By bringing together government sponsors, dedicated faculty and energetic young officers, NPS has become a national center of military innovation and transformation. NPS, for instance, created a program in low intensity conflict that supports U.S. Special Operations Command long before counterinsurgency dominated headlines. It had the best area studies program in the nation (which utilizes language training offered across town by the Defense Language Institute), long before there were calls for officers to acquire more expertise about foreign lands and peoples. Its Center for Interdisciplinary Remotely Piloted Aircraft Studies (CIRPAS) officers a place for junior officers and scientists to conduct experiments using robot aircraft and submarines. These types of Service orientated programs simply do not exist at civilian universities and were in part created by the unique synergies created when sponsors, faculty and students work together on emerging security and technical issues. One might privatize individual programs, but it is impossible to find a private sector substitute for the unique, creative environment that produces research and education of direct and immediate relevance to the needs of today's war fighter.

NPS also goes to great lengths to push education to officers wherever they are located, a task that is unlikely to be embraced by most schools. It sends teams of faculty around the world to educate officers and civilian officials in places like Afghanistan, Iraq, and Kosovo in the practices of democratic governance. Its programs help Marine, Army and National Guard units prepare for foreign deployments and its sends teams of faculty to all deploying Naval Battle Groups and Expeditionary Strike Groups to help them to better understand the current strategic setting in their operating areas. It has created a path breaking distance-learning program in Homeland Security and Defense, which brings together military officers and civilians to understand the problems that must be overcome to better protect Americans at home. By reaching thousands of students who are manning the front lines in the Global War on Terrorism, the Naval Postgraduate School makes a direct contribution to national security on a daily basis. NPS can undertake these unique initiatives, however, only because its research and educational programs sustain a core of faculty with the requisite expertise to deliver relevant education to the war fighter in nontraditional settings (i.e., as they enter combat). No other university has even attempted to offer these kinds of programs.

Practical problems also emerge as one delves into the details of privatization. Admission standards often prevent all but a few officers from attending elite schools, leaving open the possibility that the bulk of our officer corps might end up in substandard programs. Civilian universities generally offer degree programs only 9 months a year, leaving officers to scramble to take relevant courses during the summer. Few, if any, universities offer the specialized courses of study available at NPS. The best civilian universities are devoted to creating the next generation of scholars and educators, specialists that are not needed in any number by the Department of Defense. Universities are reluctant to invest in educational programs that are of primary interest to the military because it takes resources away from their traditional scholarly agendas. Classified research, which is essential to support the graduate studies of many student officers, cannot easily proceed on many college campuses. Students benefit enormously from the classified and sensitive government research conducted by faculty at NPS because it allows them to understand the policy, administrative and technical issues they will have to manage as they rise in rank. It is the link between sponsors, faculty and junior officers that makes NPS a truly unique educational and research institution. By contrast, during stressful times, many college campuses actually seek to reduce their involvement in national defense, making it difficult to sustain programs of interest to the military. For many on today's college campuses, defense research simply takes time and energy away from more desirable kinds of research.

NPS is unique. It offers a place for U.S. and allied officers to work together in the study of issues directly related to national security, providing policymakers with a national asset in the international battle for hearts and minds known as the war on terror. It offers a myriad of government sponsors, faculty and students a place to work on technical and policy issues of defense interest, devising innovative programs that combine the latest battlefield experiences with technical and policy expertise. It is a university with a unique mission – to bolster U.S. military readiness and capability – a mission embraced by no other university in the nation. These unique curricula, research programs and educational environment cannot simply be outsourced, they would have to be replicated. It makes no sense to reinvent an institution that already provides our country with a unique and invaluable national resource.

Sincerely,

James D. Watkins
Admiral, U.S. Navy (Retired)
Former Chief of Naval Operations

P.S.

Tony: We have gone through this same drill many times in the past. Cost analysts always say "it's cheaper at other universities." Of course it is, but that's not the issue. Navy professionalism in its officer corps demands a cadre in advanced educational fields focused on Navy-unique challenges, not esoteric academic studies. Navy will suffer in its officer quality significantly if this realignment is implemented. Please take it off the agenda. Prudence has prevailed over imprudent cost analysis in the past; let's let it do so once more. Thanks for the help.

Re: The Naval Postgraduate School and Defense Language Institute and the Monterey Bay Education and Research Crescent

Dear Chairman Principi and Members of the Commission:

As Chancellor of the University of California, Santa Cruz, I am writing to urge the Commission to give strong consideration to keeping the Naval Postgraduate School (NPS) and the Defense Language Institute (DLI) in Monterey. The concept of consolidation holds great promise for cost and programmatic efficiencies; however, I'm more interested in the final location than the overall management structure.

The Monterey Bay Crescent is home to over 20 institutions of higher education and research. These institutions, both public and private, represent a unique combination of talent that has both relied on and has contributed to the excellence and effectiveness of the NPS and the DLI. The unique intellectual capacity of this region with complimentary missions creates a synergy that would be impossible to reproduce in any other location.

World class institutions such as Stanford University, the California State University system, and the University of California have all invested heavily in campuses and research centers located along the shores of the Monterey Bay. The region also boasts extensive investment by David Packard's Monterey Bay Aquarium Research Institute (MBARI), the United States Geological Survey (USGS) and numerous National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) facilities and programs.

You know already of Monterey's excellence as a world center for language instruction and its profile as the language capital of the world. You may not know that the talents of this region span many disciplines from deep-sea technologies, to deep space inquiry, in addition to our foreign language and policy training capabilities. Common across these many institutions is an excellence of instruction and rigorous research.

We are proud of this great concentration of world-class educators and research. It has taken many decades to build such a strong network of talent. The faculty at each of our institutions benefits from the collocation in a region that reinforces and values their contribution. In fact, it is this network that helps attract and retain this talent at all of our institutions.

In closing, both NPS and DLI are of significant value to our region and the nation. I urge the commission to find a solution that allows the military to immediately increase the critical benefit of each. From experience, educators in our region know what a long and tedious job it is to build capability in a new educational and research institution. With the condition of today's world we, as a nation, cannot afford to lose the contributions of these institutions if they are relocated to another community. I urge you to consolidate activities and expand services in place so that we all may benefit from the unique mission and talent both the NPS and DLI have to offer.

Sincerely,

Denice D. Denton
Chancellor

Chairman Anthony Principi
Base Closure and Realignment Commission
2521 S. Clark St., Suite 600
Arlington, VA 22202

Dear Chairman Principi and Members of the Commission:

I am writing to urge the Commission to adopt the option of combining the Defense Language Institute (DLI) and the Naval Postgraduate School (NPS) into a single educational and training organization in Monterey, CA. I believe that my professional experience enables me to provide useful insights into the desirability of this course of action.

Although my predecessor initially realigned two separate war colleges, the National War College (NWC) and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces (ICAF), as components of the National Defense University (NDU), I was assigned in early February 1977 as NDU's first operating president. I served in that capacity until retirement from the US Army the end of July 1981. While the two colleges had separate missions, combining them into a university made possible substantial savings in administrative and logistical support personnel and services. In addition, this arrangement facilitated enhanced professional learning in both student bodies.

Subsequently, it was deemed prudent to realign other Department of Defense (DOD) schools as part of NDU, despite their differences in mission from the two war colleges. Several of these NDU components also are located in the National Capitol region, all much farther from NDU's location at Fort McNair than the 1.2 miles between NPS and DLI. In fact, one component of NDU, the Armed Forces Staff College, is located in Norfolk, VA, a considerable distance from Washington, DC.

While assigned from 1973 to '75 as commanding general of Fort Ord, CA, I was responsible for the Presidio of Monterey as one of Fort Ord's sub-posts. Although the missions of the Fort Ord main post and DLI were significantly different, there is no question that this arrangement was far more economical than if the two installations had been independent. We at Fort Ord provided administrative and logistical support for the Presidio without interfering in DLI's language instruction. The distance between Fort Ord and the Presidio is substantially greater than the distance between DLI and NPS.

Augmenting my exposure to DLI and NPS while commanding general of Fort Ord, I had additional opportunities to become better acquainted with both installations and their operations. I was honored to serve as an appointed member of the NPS Board of Advisors for about four years in the late 1970's/early 1980's. From 1987 to 1998, I served as president of the Monterey Institute of International Studies, a private free-standing graduate school; in that capacity, I became more familiar with both institutions while searching for ways to cooperate that would enhance the educational outcomes of all three schools.

DLI, formerly the Army Language School, has long been a joint institution in every sense; it responds to all the military services and other DOD agencies that have foreign language requirements. Its resident student body of about 3,700 and faculty of some 1,200 are programmed to increase substantially. The Army is the executive agent.

NPS has a resident student body of about 1,700 and a faculty of some 525. While it is a Department of the Navy school, about 700 of its students are from the other services, are DOD civilians or are international students of all services from some 60 countries; the number of students from other services is programmed to increase. NPS is in fact, if not in name, a joint and combined educational institution.

A previous attempt to combine NPS and DLI foundered because of inter-service problems between the Army and the Navy. The 2005 BRAC review provides an opportunity to bring the two schools together, which obviously would save academic support costs. Moreover, since both installations are surrounded by the City of Monterey, combining them also would permit additional savings in base operating costs due in part to economies of scale. Ongoing cooperation between DLI and the City of Monterey, which charges marginal, not average, costs for the base support it provides, has resulted in a savings of 49% in base operating costs at the Presidio, according to the US Army Audit Agency.

In addition, combining DLI and NPS would facilitate academic cooperation to the advantage of both schools. For example, native speaking DLI faculty from foreign countries could serve as a resource to NPS students in curricula related to international studies, while international students at NPS could perform the same function for DLI students trying to learn about the culture of countries in which their foreign language is spoken.

I hope the BRAC Commission will give careful consideration to the advantages of combining NPS and DLI into a single institution located in Monterey, CA.

Sincerely,

Robert G. Gard, Jr., PhD
