Dear Anthony:

I wanted to take a moment and inform you, for the record (though the news has been all over the papers and TV), that neither the Defense Language Institute nor the Naval Postgraduate School will be moving or closing as part of the 2005 base closure round. This is good news for all of us – the Monterey community, the schools and their students and faculty and staff, and for the country in terms of maintaining a high level of expertise in language intelligence and military engineering.

I commend every person who helped make the case to the BRAC Commission that tampering with these schools was a bad idea. In particular, I praise my colleagues Senators Feinstein and Boxer, and the City of Monterey including Mayor Dan Albert and City Manager Fred Meurer. They were of extraordinary assistance to me and the military in organizing the local BRAC hearing, the on-site visit to the schools and the testimony that finally convinced the Commission that status quo was the optimum outcome.

The one thing the Commission did recommend in the end was that the NPS should form a more cohesive union with its Air Force sister school, the Air Force Institute of Technology in Dayton, Ohio. I will be heading up a team to explore the best way to do this and working on legislation in Congress to fulfill the Commission's mandate.

As I said in my testimony to the Commission, it wasn't just the fate of these two institutions that rested in their hands, or the impact on Monterey, but the safety and defense and military intellectual prowess of the United States. The Commission heard the message. Now it is our responsibility to make it so.

Sincerely,
